Insects are less attracted to 600 nanometre wavelength light:

At 600 nanometres (nm) - which is in the orange-red light spectrum - most insects are less likely to be attracted to an area.

The reason this light is effective against different insect types:

Insects that rely on shorter wavelengths (UV, blue, green) for navigation and attraction will ignore light at 600 nm.

These include:

- Mosquitoes
 - Strongly attracted to UV and blue light; 600 nm is outside their visual sensitivity.
- Moths
 - Attracted to UV and cool white light; orange-red light is less visible to them.
- Flies (houseflies, fruit flies)
 - Prefer blue and green light; orange light is not stimulating.
- Beetles and gnats
 - Also more responsive to shorter wavelengths.

PLEASE NOTE: 600 nm light is a passive deterrent to insects, meaning that it does not actively repel, like citronella oil, but it reduces attraction of insects.

Why 600 nm works as a deterrent:

Insects have photoreceptors tuned to UV and blue-green light. Light at 600 nm:

- Falls outside their optimal visual range.
- Does not trigger their attraction response.
- Is more comfortable for humans and less likely to draw bugs.

Insect repellent lights in farming:

Using insect repellent lights in the 600 – 620 nm range is considered safe for cattle and should not interfere with breeding or fertility.

Precautions should be taken to ensure that the light intensity is not too excessive, and that the photoperiod is managed appropriately – meaning that the cows are not exposed to 24 hours of continuous light.

The reduction of insects has a positive impact on cattle:

Less horn flies, stable flies and face flies results in less irritation, biting, and constant movement.

Insect repellent floods are eco-friendly (no chemicals) and low maintenance.
